Not illustrated. 1863 Excerpt: .committees for the same purpose in different towns on the continent, which still exist. Manor Hall, an asylum for discharged prisoners, was formed in connection with this society, with a school of discipline or reform for younger prisoners. g Another very important branch is the Patronage Sub-committee, which meets once a week to give attention to the cases of discharged prisoners. An institution called the Elizabeth Fry Refuge (fitting memorial of such a woman!) is also a valuable auxiliary. But there were other fields of labou beside the prison, in which the ministry of woman in the communion of labour was needed. On one of these, circumstances were to arise which should be of such urgent character as to prepare the public mind for remarkable innovations on prejudice and conventualism. It is in retirement that all the great instruments of Divine Providence have matured their powers, and prepared for their appointed work: so was it with Florence Nightingale. The work which has rendered her name a beloved household word in every English home had been the devotion and object of her life, and her aptitude for it was gained by the systematic discharge of unostentatious acts of charity, thus attaining to great from little things. Well born, and nurtured in luxury, her rare qualifications were so well known in private life, that when the horrors of the Crimean campaign were realized, the then Secretary of War, the lamented Lord Herbert, entracted the aid of Miss Nightingale...
