Though it was somewhat against his inclination, he accepted the friendly invitation gratefully, and the materials for writing being set before him, he addressed the following epistle to Mr. Thornton: Honoured Master! Your goodness to me, in all ways, would make any abuse of it on my part a heavy crime indeed--too heavy, I think, for me to commit, or you to suspect me of. But I cannot be at the supper-table at Nickerby, on next Saturday night, according to my promise. A very strange thing has happened to me, dear master, which may, perhaps, come to nothing, and in that case I know you will hear my story, and pity me too much to think of anger. But if all I hope comes to pass, your generous heart will rejoice with me, and you will bless your own goodness, for bringing me to the...
