Ah! what a night! what a terrible night! (The mist is parted by a gust of wind; and Anthony sees two men covered with long white tunics. The first is of lofty stature, with a gentle face, and a grave mien. His blond hair, parted like that of Christ, falls upon his shoulders. He has cast aside a wand that he had been holding in his hand; his companion takes it up, making a reverence after the fashion of the Orientals. The latter is small of stature, thick set, flatnosed; his neck and shoulders expresses good natured simplicity. Both are barefooted, bareheaded, and dusty, like persons who have made a long journey.) Anthony (starting up: --) What do ye seek? Speak! Begone from here! Damis (who is a little man). Nay! nay! be not angered, good hermit. As for that I seek, I know not myself what it is! Here is the Master! (He sits down. The other stranger remains standing. Silence.) Anthony (asks). Then ye come? Damis. Oh! from afar off--very far off! Anthony. And ye go? Damis (pointing to the other) Whithersoever he shall desire! Anthony. But who may he be? Damis. Look well upon him! Anthony (aside). He looks like a saint! If I could only dare. (The mist is all gone. The night is very clear. The moon shines.) Damis. Of what art thou dreaming, that thou dost not speak? Anthony. I...
